Report, &c.

REASON distinguishes man, and gives him an unlimited capacity for acquisitions of knowledge. The powers of creatures beneath him in the scale of existence, appear to be greatly circumscribed. Instinct is stationary, but reason is sometimes retrograde, and sometimes progressive in its march. If man had continued in his primitive state of innocence, his understanding, while he enjoyed intercourse with his Maker, would have been increasingly vigorous, and constant accessions to the furniture of his mind, would have followed; but when sin drove him from the great source of knowledge, and holiness, and happiness, his reason became depraved, and his understanding was filled with prejudices against truth. Hence, after the dispersion of men from the plains of Shinar, where the first communications of revealed religion had been preserved, the further they removed towards the extremities of the earth and the less they had intercourse with one another, the more the traces of early revelation were effaced; they became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish hearts were darkened still more and more, till, in the progress of ages, their degradation has been almost completed, and they have sunk to a state little different from that of the brutes that perish: for, generally speaking, such seems to be the result of moral depravity, when man is not excited by any foreign impulse, but left to himself.

Some men of Grecian origin, possessing genius, prompted by curiosity, and thirsting after knowledge, having learned that the East was the cradle of science and literature, travelled into Palestine, Chaldea, and Egypt, and collected the remains of traditionary knowledge, still existing in those early settlements of the human race, and also information relative to useful arts, which had been cultivated among them. The consequence of which was, that when they returned they opened schools for the instruction of others. This was the origin of those Seminaries which have been so celebrated in succeeding ages, and which have made the nations of Greece so conspicuous amidst the population of the earth.

The employment of this expedient for the improvement of the human mind and the dissemination of knowledge, which had been suggested by reason, or which, perhaps, had been adopted in imitation of the Jews, among whom schools of the prophets had long previously existed, was sanctioned by the example of our ever blessed Redeemer. He called twelve Gallileans to be his followers, they became his disciples, he took them under his care for instruction, he taught them the mysteries of his kingdom, and trained them up for the most important services in which mortals were ever engaged. Nearly four years they enjoyed his personal instructions, and when he was about to finish the work given him to do, he gave them their commission to preach the Gospel, directing them not to enter immediately on its execution, but to wait till extraordinary power had been communicated to them. Their circumstances were extraordinary, and it was necessary that they should have extraordinary qualifications.

In the circumstances of our Lord and his disciples, there are then some things which are beyond the reach of our imitation; there are, however, others which it is our duty to imitate, and the imitation of which, not only stands intimately connected with our individual interests as Christians, but also with the general prosperity of our Redeemer's cause. There are also things which the introduction of Christianity, and the accomplishment of divine purposes required to be done immediately, and by miracle, but which, in the general circumstances of the church when there is less urgency, may be, and ought to be attained, in the use of means with which Providence, in its ordinary course, hath furnished us. We have no supernatural discernment, for the purpose of selecting individuals, that an education may be given them preparatory to their discharging the duties of the ministerial office, nor can we invest them with the power of working miracles, to give a character of divinity to the doctrines they may have to teach. But we learn from the example of our Lord and Master, that he considered it requisite, that those who were to be commissioned by him to be employed in the ministry of the Gospel, should pass a considerable time in a course of training, for the important employment to which they were destined.

Now, if Samuel, Elijah, and others among the Jews established schools, probably under the immediate direction of God himself, that the best interests of their country might be promoted; if the sages of Greece, gathered round them the youth who had an ardent desire after the acquisition of knowledge, that they might thus enlighten the population of their native land, and extend its reputation and power; and if our Lord himself kept his select disciples some years under tuition, before they entered on the full discharge of their apostolic commission, there can be no doubt remaining, relative to the importance of encouraging, patronizing, and supporting Institutions, which have had the sanction of wisdom, human and divine; which have for their object, not only the diffusion of knowledge, with a view to civilize nations and improve their moral character, but also, according to the arrangements of heaven, the communication of spiritual blessings of the highest value, and intimately connected with the present and everlasting happiness of men.

The Seminaries which have been formed and supported, and indulged with privileges by the different governments of Europe, number in their lists of students thousands exhibiting every shade of character, and having views and intentions infinitely diversified. Amidst such a motley assemblage, it may seem doubtful how pious candidates for the Christian ministry, can find themselves in circumstances favourable to a preparation for the holy services of the sanctuary. Even among Dissenters, who were considered as separating themselves more visibly from the world, the first Seminaries were of a mixed character. The sons of opulent Dissenters, without any profession in view, and others intended for the bar, or the practice of medicine, were admitted along with candidates for the ministry. Nor was this the only evil which operated to the disadvantage and prejudice of their Institutions. According to the fond wishes and partialities of parents, youth, without giving any substantial evidence of personal piety, were often introduced into them, that they might be qualified for assuming the ministerial character, and then followed a description of ministers, who proved the bane of dissenting churches. There was also another thing, which contributed not a little towards the unpreparedness of Students in those early Academies, for the discharge of public duties; they were kept close to their mathematical and literary studies, and for the greatest part, if not the whole of their period of education, prevented from exercising any ability they might possess as preachers; the consequence was, that being untrained for any thing approaching a popular mode of address, they often contented themselves with becoming lifeless readers of sermons. But as far as Dissenters of our denomination are concerned, things have undergone an important change, the evils to which allusion has been made have been remedied, our Academies are in prosperous circumstances, every thing that wisdom can suggest has been done to render their machinery efficient; such as have been educated in them are, with a few exceptions, a credit to their profession, and have become the means of extensive usefulness, some of them, by the brilliancy of their talents, reflect a lustre on the age in which they live.

In presenting their Report, your Committee have to announce again, the continued prosperity of our Institution. In the last Report it was mentioned, that there were some vacancies, and that no application had been made for the admission of probationers, but since the publication of the Report, the number of applicants would do more than fill up the vacancies. There are at present thirteen Students, besides Mr. Evans, who lives in the village, and supports himself and family. During the last year, owing to causes stated in a former Report, applications for assistance have not been so numerous as in past years. At times, indeed, the Academy has not been able to furnish all the assistance that has been required, but at other times there have been two or three of the Students unemployed on Sabbath days. Wortley, Northallerton, Morley, Blubber Houses, Elland, Allerton, and Eccleshill, have been constantly supplied, and Tadcaster and Wetherby alternately. For some weeks lately, during Mr. Jefferson's illness, supplies have been sent to Thirsk; and, until the beginning of January, the Students continued their services at Settle.

At the beginning of the year, Mr. Ellis, who had some time before received a call from the Church and Congregation at the last mentioned place, left the Academy to commence stated labours among them, with the approbation of the Home Missionary Society. The circumstances of the people had been very discouraging, the interest formed among them had long struggled with difficulties, its very existence had been seriously threatened, but still Mr. Ellis, under the patronage of the Society, proceeded with a spirit of disinterestedness and fortitude to undertake a charge, which certainly had not many attractions However, since his entrance on his charge around it. the Congregation has increased, and the aspect of things is at present more promising, than it has been for several years past.

Of the places that have been enumerated as having been, during the last twelve months, supplied by the Students, the following merit distinct notice, and shew the growing usefulness of the Academy.

Allerton is six miles from Idle, in this village a very commodious chapel, calculated to hold about seven hundred hearers, was built about ten years ago. Mr. Harrison, who had previously been settled at Bury, in Lancashire, was the first minister, and died in 1821. Mr. Hinchliffe succeeded him, but unpleasant circumstances occurring, and his prospects of usefulness becoming clouded, he honourably resigned his charge. For some time settled Ministers in the neighbourhood supplied the chapel on Sabbath days, and since February the Students have been sent to continue forward the public worship of God amidst a considerable population.

Elland is thirteen miles from the Academy. At first it was visited partly by Ministers, and partly by Students. Regular preaching commenced about four years ago, in a chamber. Last year a chapel was built, which has been supplied by the Students, and the attendance is good. There is a spacious room under the chapel occupied as a Sunday school, and there are about 130 scholars. Considering the smallness of its beginning, the Interest has at present an encouraging appearance.

Eccleshill is only about two miles from Idle, in the direction of Bradford. For a long period there had been members of the Independent churches at Bradford and Idle, resident in or near this village, and those individuals seeing the population increasing fast around them, began to consider whether it was not their duty to make pecuniary contributions, according to their circumstances, that a chapel might be erected for the purpose of accommodating such of their increasing numbers, as might be disposed to attend a place of worship conveniently near. Their pious design was speedily accomplished; a neat and spacious chapel was built; it was opened for the worship of God last October, on which occasion Messrs. Cockin, James Parsons, and Hamil-TON officiated; and since then religious services have been generally conducted in it by the Students, with a fair prospect of establishing a respectable Interest,

At this period Mr. Bean closes his term of residence in the Academy. According to an invitation which he received more than a year ago, from the church and congregation assembling in the old chapel at Heckmondwike, he is about to enter on the stated ministry of the word at that Place, where Mr. Scott, the first tutor of the Academy established in this district, passed twenty-eight years of his useful life, and honourably terminated his course.

Your Committee on resigning the trust which you committed to them at our last Meeting, cannot but express the satisfaction they have felt, on witnessing the uninterrupted prosperity of our Institution through another year. As they are fully persuaded, that unless the Lord build the house they labour in vain that build it, they would be thankful to Him that he has smiled upon the measures of those, who have for a period of twenty-four years managed the affairs of the Academy, and that he has crowned their efforts with so much success.

APPENDIX.

THE examination of the Students took place on Tuesday June 22. The Ministers who have generally undertaken this important office, met in the morning, and through the whole day were employed in ascertaining the progress made by the members of the different classes in the course of their education.

In Latin, the Students read Cæsar, Lib. iii. 13—16. Virgil Æn. Lib. iii. 433—505. Passages in Cicero's Oration for Marcellus, and his fourth against Cataline.

Horace Lib. i. Od. 14 and 15. Lib. i. Ep. 2. and the character of Augustus as drawn by Tacitus.

In Greek, part of the Sixteenth Chapter of Luke; passages in the First and Third Books of Xenophon's Cyropædia; also in the Anabasis, one of his Speeches to his Ten Thousand Greeks, when on their celebrated Retreat; and Homer, Lib. iv. 148—183.

In Hebrew, the Sixtieth Chapter of Isaiah, and the Twelfth of Ecclesiastes.

In Chaldee, Daniel's Interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's.

Dream; and—

In Syriac, part of the Tenth Chapter of Matthew, and Paul's Speech before Agrippa.

During this examination a variety of talent was, of course, perceivable, but on the whole the attainments which had been evidently made in the improvement of a diversity of gifts, were creditable to the Institution. Other branches of study have also occupied attention, especially general Grammar, the powers of Language, the composition of Sermons, and a system of Theology.

On the day after the examination, the friends of the Institution assembled in the chapel; Mr. C. Holgate commenced with prayer, and four of the senior Students delivered Essays. Mr. Bean on Liberty of Conscience, Mr. Heselton on the Mediatorial Dignity and Authority of Christ, Mr. Buckley on the Conversion of the Gentiles, and Mr. W. Vint on the Happiness of Heaven. The Rev. R. Pool, of Kippin, then gave the Students many appropriate and useful admonitions, relative to their conduct in future life.

On commencing the Meeting for business, J. Holland, Esq. in the chair, the Report was read, afterwards resolutions were moved and seconded, and speeches of an interesting character were delivered by the Ministers who were present. In the Evening, the Rev. James Parsons of York, closed the important exercises and proceedings of the day, with a discourse on the increasing glory of the church of God.

The state of the finances does not call for much observation. In some instances there has been a considerable falling off in the contributions, and in others there has been an augmentation, but the increase has not balanced the decrease. On the other hand, the expenditure for the board of Students has been less than in some former years, but at the same time extra expenses have been greater. The condition of the Library imperiously required attention; Walton's Polyglott, and some other of the most valuable books belonging to the Institution, were in a very shattered state of binding, and their repairs have encroached a little upon our funds.

When the last Report was published, several Students had a short time before left the Academy, and settled in different places, and no applications had been made by candidates for the Christian Ministry, that the vacancies thus occasioned might again be filled up with another race of Students. But since the publication of the Report three were admitted at Christmas, and the Committee at their last Meetings, promised admission to other three, so that if we were in the preceding year short of our usual number, we may this year exceed it a little. There will be fourteen Students in the House, if not more, besides Mr. Evans, who bears the expense of his own education. Such being the circumstances of our Institution, its prosperity must encourage the public spirited friends of Religion, when they devise means to extend the influence of the Gospel. In two of the cases particularized in this Report, where chapels have been lately built in the neighbourhood of other chapels of our own denomination, some of the most active and efficient individuals lived only about a mile from their former place of worship, and they never would have formed the noble project of multiplying houses for God, amidst a continually increasing population, if they had not calculated on obtaining regular supplies from our Institution. But are there not other places, at no great distance from the Academy, where the thickly planted, not to say crowded habitations of our fellow men, seem as if they would justify still further efforts to multiply accommodations for hearing the word of life? The Parliament of our country has come to a conclusion that church room is necessary, and vasts sums of money have been expended to supply the deficiency. But believing, as we do, that much more than mere accommodation is wanted, to attract the attention of people indifferent to the things of God, to secure their attendance on religious worship, and to inspire us with the hope of promoting their spiritual and eternal interests, ought we not to act consistently with the judgment we have formed, of what will bring usefulness within the range of the greatest probability, and of what will contribute most to advance the glory of our ever blessed Redeemer? And if in our populous district more places of worship should appear desirable, the Academy at Idle is ready, at no great expense, to furnish its assistance; indeed, it will then accomplish one leading object of its establishment.
